

One-third of American Indians and Alaska Natives lived on reservations and designated statistical areas.

- In 2000, about 34 percent of the American Indian and Alaska Native population lived in American Indian areas (AIAs).<sup>9</sup>
- Two percent of the American Indian and Alaska Native population lived in ANVSAs, while 64 percent lived outside these tribal areas.<sup>10</sup>

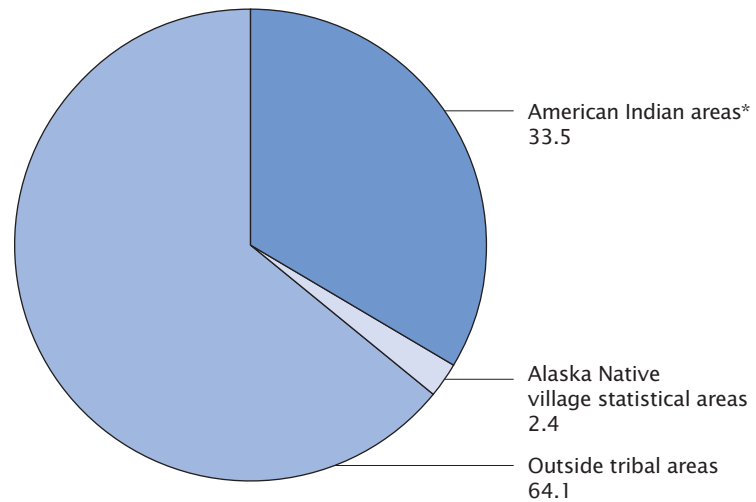

<sup>9</sup> American Indian areas include American Indian reservations and/or off-reservation trust lands (federal), Oklahoma tribal statistical areas (OTSAs), tribal designated statistical areas (TDSAs), American Indian reservations (state), and state designated American Indian statistical areas (SDAISAs). Selected characteristics for the single-race American Indian and Alaska Native population living in large specific American Indian reservations are provided in Table 3.

<sup>10</sup> Selected characteristics for the single-race American Indian and Alaska Native population living in large specific ANVSAs are provided in Table 3.

Figure 10.

American Indian and Alaska Native Population by Place of Residence: 2000

(Percent distribution. Data based on sample. For information on confidentiality protection, sampling error, nonsampling error, and definitions, see www.census.gov/prod/cen2000/doc/sf4.pdf)

* Includes federal reservations and/or off-reservation trust lands (20.9 percent), Oklahoma tribal statistical areas (9.3 percent), tribal designated statistical areas (0.1 percent), state reservations (0.04 percent), and state designated American Indian statistical areas (3.2 percent).

Source: U.S. Census Bureau, Census 2000 Summary File 4.